Museum Riches on Cards

Cincinnati, Ohio (Special) — Rewarding insight into the great treasury of Jewish culture, spread out in meaningful panorama in the College Museum, is afforded to the many through the publication this winter of a special series of postcards, initiated by Dr. Franz Landsberger, curator.

Through the issuance of the cards, which reproduce in their elaborate detail a few of the Museum's significant and colorful objects, visitors will be able to retain a permanent souvenir of the contact they have made with the variety and splendor of Jewish art.

Enlargements Available

For the thousands who have yet to see the Museum, the cards will be an introduction to an institution which serves not only the student community on campus but also reaches out to the people with a traveling display of Jewish art treasures. Enlargements are available for more detailed study and decorative purposes.

One of the cards shows a 16th Century Italian wedding ring which centres a little house in a band of gold, a gift from the bridegroom to the bride. This was intended as a visible sign of their union and was designed as a ritual object, not to be worn every day. The little house represented the new home of the couple.

special document (K'subo) which sets forth all the obligations which husband took upon himself. In the illustration, the Prophet Samuel represented because Samuel was the name of the bridegroom.

Two 18th Century items bring to mind an earlier German Jew, a cultural and religious life into a collection. One, dated 1771, is a photo of an elaborately embroidered Torah binder given to boys on their first visit to the synagogue. The other is a pewter seder plate dated from 1776, illustrating the Passover lamb.

From 18th Century Poland to the two remaining objects of the illustrated, a Sabbath lamp by the coppersmiths of Cracow and a silver Hanukkah lamp. The latter consists of eight oil flasks and sockets for lighting the flask. It displays an intricate design in filigree technique. Its two doors and crown refer to the Ark and to the Torah.

"Folk Theatre" Founded by Immigrants

Tel Aviv, (Special) — The new immigrants who came to Israel since the foundation of the State include not a small number of professional actors. Most are from Poland, Rumania and France. The fighting forces absorbed the younger ones into the various military theatres; a minority were admitted to the ranks of existing theatres, where their influence is already being felt. Many of the new immigrants were quite well-known as actors in their countries of origin, and were members of famous theatrical companies.

A number of former professional members of Jewish theatres from Eastern Europe, however, decided to found a new theatrical group — the "Folk Theatre" came into being. Yaakov Mansdorf, the actor-producer, was especially invited over from Paris. Their first play, "I Live," by Moshe Anichewsky, the Soviet writer, is now being presented.

The play is in three acts, the Hebrew translation by Ben Zion Yedidiah. The music is by Chaim Schwartzman, the scenery by S. Perahim, and the lyrics by Yaakov Friedman.

The story deals with a group of Jews in a concentration camp. The Gestapo, in order to relieve their boredom, force Reb Bezael Shapir to give the impression that he is a traitor to his people. Reb Shapir is supposed to supply the names of the Jews who are to be chosen for death. Meanwhile, his lovely daughter is picked out to be the commandant's mistress. Eventually victory goes to the Jews, who manage to contact the band of partisans hidden in the woods near the camp. This is accomplished through the bravery of Reb Shapir and his companion, Hershale, who has been blinded by the Gestapo.

Most of the press, while welcoming the formation of the "Folk Theatre," was reserved in its appraisal of the new production.

Ha'aretz commented that the subject was taken from personal experience in Nazi extermination camps. "In the light of these facts, the play and the actors are entitled to a special approach and special treatment. One particularly pleas-
