wretch, a feeling of pity and a feeling of anger. He is pursuing me, haunting me — what does he want from me?

For the first time in my life as a soldier I am suddenly afraid of death . . . I am sorry that this helpless person has attached himself to me all this time and reminds me of my dead father in my childhood years.

Suddenly shrapnel explodes a few steps away from me — the enemy's artillery has located us.

"Fedya," I push my batman — "Pull him over from there over here to this side of the hill. He won't last very long over there."

More shrapnel explodes again a few steps away. I am completely covered by stones and torn up pieces of tree which began to fly all around. In the confusion I lost everyone.

An hour later when after heavy, intense battle we repulsed the enemy and collected our dead, my unknown friend lay wrapped up in a bloodstained tallis, his hands stretched out in an unrecited prayer. A few steps away from him lay Fedya my batman, killed by a shot in his abdomen.

On both sides of the forest two great collective graves were dug: on one stood a huge wooden cross made of half-burned branches of the trees, on the other only a smooth board on which there were carved two narrow lines consisting of the names of Jewish soldiers. After the third line instead of the name there stood only the words:

"He found a hero's death for his country Name: unknown."
