Recreational opportunities are meager. Aside from the YMCA there is no building with adequate facilities for leisure time use, and the few playgrounds are rather primitive.

Social problems result from the presence of many groups of varying cultural status, lack of organized recreation, shortage of remunerative employment and the generally difficult conditions of living, accentuated by the tensions caused by Arab attacks and boycott, a national condition at present, but apparently acute in Jerusalem, divided by a strip of "no man's land" from Jordan.

In these circumstances, a "Y" is particularly needed. The need was recognized several years ago by a group of public spirited citizens who appealed to the World Federation of YMHAs and Jewish Community Centres to help them establish an appropriate organization.

The War of Independence delayed action. The original plan for a large, well equipped new building could not be pursued because of the difficulties in raising funds in the United States and other lands, where Jews were asked to give priority to UJA and other established causes for Israel. A modest beginning was made in 1950 and a program launched.

The "Y" called the "Beth Hanoar" (House of Youth), occupies a rented building containing 14 rooms and located on Hillel Street, in the heart of the business district. The largest room seats 175. Rooms are fitted as a lounge, game rooms, kosher kitchen, cafeteria, library, music room, meeting rooms and class rooms. There is no outdoor play as yet available. Equipment is being added as funds permit.

The staff consists of a full time trained director, several part time workers with special group work training, teachers on part time and a number of volunteer group leaders.

The program is very similar to that of the average small Y or Jewish Centre in the United States or

One of the interesting developments has been the stimulation which the "Y" has given to groups in other cities, the result being the establishment of similar organizations in Ramat Gan, Tel Aviv and in other places.

The "Y" is increasingly successful in reaching individuals of diverse backgrounds and thus promoting inter-cultural relations. It stands for non-partisanship and a non-political approach and has an "open-door" policy of membership affiliation. The Board of Directors is representative of all elements in the population. Mr. and Mrs. Abe Harmon, formerly of Canada, are also helpful to the Committee.

The Montreal YMHA, Toronto YMHA and Hamilton Jewish Community Centre have already sent in their contributions in 1956. We hope other Centres will follow.
