World News in Brief

Buenos Aires

Eleven Jewish institutions, which were closed down by police two weeks ago as part of a general crackdown on leftist groups, were allowed to re-open this week. None of the affected institutions were affiliated with the DAIA, the representative body of organized Argentine Jewry. Among the Jewish institutions affected by the temporary ban were the IET Yiddish Theatre, a publishing house, two cultural centres and four schools here.

Cairo

Grigory S. Piskow-Meisels who headed a Soviet trade mission here, was asked to leave after Nasser's chief of the secret police, Hans von Lerm, a former associate of Dr. Globke, learned that the Soviet diplomat was Jewish-born, and that the middle initial of his name, "S", stands for "Shmulewitsch."

Jerusalem

It is suspected here that West Germany is mainly responsible for keeping Israel out of the Common Market because of a secret understanding with Nasser and the Arab League. For a long time the Arabs have maintained that German "reparations" blunt their boycott against Israel. The "secret understanding," therefore, tends to recompense them for the money Germany allocates to Israel. An Arab League delegate to the UN said privately: if the 14 years of the Arab boycott failed to strangle Israel economically, the Common Market will, and so make up for the benefits derived from German reparations.

Montreal

The Oriental Institute of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem has received a $30,000 grant by Jesse and Milton Lowenthal and their sister, Mrs. Mabel L. Lewit. The grant will be used for translations from Arabic into Hebrew and from Hebrew into Arabic of classical and modern literary works in both languages. The Institute is also planning to set up libraries for Afro-Asian studies. The Rockefeller Foundation had given the Institute an additional grant of $10,000.

New York

The first year of the redemption of Israel bonds will be ushered in at a special planning conference of the board of governors of the Israel Bond Organization January 12 and 13 here. More than 250 key Jewish leaders of the United States and Canada will participate. The first Israel Independence Savings Bonds, sold in 1951, will become payable starting May 1, 1963, almost simultaneously with the 15th Anniversary of the establishment of the state.

Paris

A French Jew, M. Hass Picard, at present Prefect of Marseilles, is expected to become Prefect of the Department of the Seine, which covers the entire Greater Paris area. The position is considered to be one of the highest civil posts in France. As Prefect of Marseilles, he has had to deal with numerous problems affecting North African refugees.

Rio de Janeiro

Fire from a shotgun spattered windows and doorways of several Jewish shops and the Jewish Community Centre at Salvador, capital of Bahia Province, in a night attack this week. The perpetrators of the attack were not identified, but police believe the firing was done by a terrorist group. There are about 500 Jewish families in Salvador.

Santiago

Police in Aisen, in southern Chile, are seeking members of a secret Nazi organization believed responsible for the unsolved murder of a Jewish nurse, Nora Eldor, who was found slain in April 1961 in a mountain area near Bariloche bordering the Patagonian section of Argentina not far from the Chilean border. There were reports that she had been murdered because she had discovered the whereabouts of Dr. Josef Mengele, the "selection doctor" at the Auschwitz murder camp. Dr. Mengele, who had the assignment of selecting camp inmates to be killed, has been sought since the end of World War II and is believed to be in hiding in South America.

Toronto

Canadian Jewish Congress in Ontario has formed the Study Commission on the Jewish Day School. It will "explore ways and means of ensuring that the legitimate financial requirements of the Jewish day schools will be adequately met through the development of new sources of revenue." Also "to consider the advisability and feasibility of seeking support from public as well as private sources, but having due regard to the divergent views that exist in the Jewish community on this question."

Daniel "Nick" Korman was elected mayor of Englehart, a northern Ontario town of 1,650, defeating the incumbent, Mrs. Ruby Bryan who held the post for two terms. Mr. Korman's father, David Korman, was mayor of Englehart for 15 years before his retirement.

Trenton

A 22-year-old robber here has admitted that he has turned over most of the proceeds of several robberies, totaling about $30,000, to the headquarters of the American Nazi Party at Arlington, Va. He had previously served a 60-day jail sentence in Baltimore where he had been arrested following an American Nazi Party demonstration in which he had participated while wearing a Nazi uniform.

Washington

Fewer Jews would survive an all-out atomic attack on the United States than members of other religious groups, according to a study by sociologists of the University of California for the U.S. Office of Civilian Defense. It was pointed out that it was assumed a major attack would kill more city dwellers than rural residents and since Jews are concentrated in big cities, they would be harder hit than other groups, according to the accepted hypothesis. A similar situation would affect Roman Catholics to some extent.

HOSPITAL CRISIS

'SHOCKED BEYOND WORDS' SAYS HADASSAH LEADER

Jerusalem (JTA) — The Hadassah Medical Organization in Jerusalem sent this week dismissal notices to 160 medical and administrative staff members of a group of its services and touched off a sharp dispute with Israeli officials.

The dispute turned on the question of responsibility for provision of an annual budget of 1,000,000 pounds for Hadassah's clinics, welfare, school hygiene and dental services, which Hadassah plans to give up next April 1. Hadassah had offered to turn the facilities over to the Jerusalem municipality and received some counter-proposals. The dismissal notices followed refusal of the Health Ministry and the municipality to take over financial responsibility for the facilities.

Deputy Health Minister Yitzhak Rafal and Jerusalem Mayor Mordechai Ish-Shalom fired off a cable to Hadassah's headquarters in New York protesting the dismissals, calling the action "unwarranted and one-sided." The Health Ministry reiterated its proposal to have Hadassah relinquish the facilities in April 1964 with Hadassah providing half of the maintenance costs for five years after that date.

Dr. Kalman Mann, Hadassah Medical Organization director, said the Ministry's counter-offer had been rejected because Hadassah's policy now was to utilize its limited funds in pioneering "growth point" projects. He added that in communities where there was no real municipality or Health Ministry aid, Hadassah was willing to undertake responsibility but that the Jerusalem situation was different. He added that Hadassah was ready to contribute half of maintenance costs in Jerusalem for the first year and one-third for the second and third years. The Jerusalem municipality declined to assume any financial responsibility, contending its treasury policy bans higher taxes. The Health Ministry is opposed to taking over local services but it is willing to help. It appeared that the Israel Treasury would have to step in.

The Health Ministry protest brought a prompt response from Hadassah headquarters in New York where Mrs. Siegfried Kramarsky, national president, called the Israeli protests "misleading." She pointed out that Hadassah had been negotiating for years with the Health Ministry and Jerusalem officials on the matter. She cited meetings with Mayor Ish-Shalom in November, 1961, and with Rafal in June, 1962. She said that Hadassah had felt that through those meetings, "we had reached an understanding for the orderly transfer of the Jerusalem centres in which Hadassah would participate in the maintenance of the centres for the first few years on a gradually decreasing basis."

She added that "in view of this understanding and our long-standing tradition of 50 years of transferring well-established services to local authorities, we are shocked beyond words at the public statements by the Ministry of Health and the Jerusalem Municipality which imply sudden and new action by Hadassah and ignore the negotiations conducted with them over a period of three years."

Sentence Shtarkes to 3 Years

Jerusalem (JTA) — Shalom Shtarkes has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment for kidnapping his nephew, Yossele Schumacher, and to two years for perjury in connection with the case. The sentences, which will run concurrently, will be reckoned from August 1961, when Shtarkes was first jailed in London on an extradition request by the Israeli Government. The sentences are subject to appeal.

The court found that there was no doubt that it was the accused who brought Yossele to the isolated settlement of Kommennit to hide him from his parents, and so was clearly guilty of child-stealing, and it did not matter that Yossele co-operated. Shtarkes had exploited the boy's faith and, by using deceit, had terrorized him into believing that his parents planned to return him to Russia where he would become a "goy," the judgment stated. Neither could Shtarkes claim exemption from the charges on the grounds that he was merely an agent for his father.

The judgment held that the accused clearly perjured himself when he told the Israel High Court he did not know Yossele's whereabouts when the boy's parents sought a writ for his return. This was a deliberate lie, but for which the search for Yossele on three continents would have been shortened by two years.

Jewish Congress And Chancellor Dispute Issue

Montreal (JTA) — Canadian Jewish Congress and Chancellor P. E. Powell of McGill University were engaged in a dispute last week over the Chancellor's public statement that he opposed legislation "to force integration and the elimination of discrimination and other forms of prejudice."

Chancellor Powell made his statement as guest speaker at a banquet of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews. The Chancellor also dealt with charges that a Jewish student was discriminated against at the university to the extent that he had to receive marks of 80 per cent or more on his high school final examination before he was admitted to the university.

Describing the report as "nothing more than a rumor," Mr. Powell told the banquet that "the percentage of McGill students who have declared themselves to be Jewish has increased steadily during the last five years — from 22 to 25.3 per cent." He added that the figures for 1962-63 had not yet been analyzed but that during the year, the university had 2,414 Jewish students, the majority of whom had an average of less than 80 per cent on their high school examinations when their applications were accepted. "I therefore consider myself to be able to state that there had been no discrimination against Jewish candidates for admission to McGill during the five years to which the investigation See DISPUTE, page 14

Dedicate Hebrew U. High School

Mrs. Charles Hymes of Minneapolis, president of the National Council of Jewish Women, accepts keys to the new half-million dollar Hebrew University High School campus of buildings in Jerusalem from Professor Alexander M. Dushkin, chairman of the school's board of trustees. The model school was provided by the women's educational and service organization. Dedication speakers (from left) were Eliahu Elath, president of Hebrew University, and Abba Eban, Israel Minister of Education. The NCJW also provides support to the John Dewey School of Education of Hebrew University, which uses the high school as a practice-teaching and demonstration centre.
