LUPU AND JACOB

The clever dog knew where every child lived and whenever the teacher went to visit a pupil to find out why he was absent Lupu would run ahead of her, as if he wanted to show her the way.

Lupu, the school children and the teacher were always lively and cheerful, until one day when a stranger in a brown uniform suddenly arrived at the school.

It was a bright morning in the spring. The village was covered with blossoms of the fruit trees as if with snow. A dense verdure enveloped the forest behind the school. Lupu was swinging the bell and the pupils, with their school bags on their shoulders, marched to the tempo of the sound toward the school. They followed the green field path singing a spring song.

"Spring is beautiful in Germany, in Germany." The voice of little "Song Bird Jacob" could be heard above all the rest. The joy of the children was carried way out of the village as far as the vaulted blue sky. The forest picked up the words of this song and with its deep voice reverberated "Germany, Germany." The teacher, dressed in a white blouse, then appeared. "Spring in Germany," she joined the chorus, as she came to meet her pupils. The overgrown nine-year-old Hans took his teacher by one hand and the little seven-year-old Jacob by the other and the singing grew even livelier and more cheerful, till they reached the school door.

Hearing from afar the joyous voices of his friends, Lupu began to pull the rope more forcefully and faster, and with his clever eyes looked them over as if counting them. When he saw that they were all there he stopped ringing and accompanied the singing group to the school door. There he haunched on his hind legs, tilted his head sidepricked up his right ear and listened attentively to the children's conversations. Suddenly he jumped up. A stranger in a brown uniform and brown boots was coming toward the school. Under his arm he carried a large framed portrait. Before Lupu knew it, the stranger had entered the school. Lupu stuck his head through the door that was left ajar by the stranger. He saw the man approaching the teacher and handing her a paper. Lupu restlessly wagged his tail, growling through the door, as if he meant to say "What does he want, children, why does he interrupt our studies?" The children didn't notice Lupu, for they, too, stared at the unexpected visitor in great astonishment.
