backed by threats and actual violence.

At present, in Israel, the coalition government includes the Orthodox element, not the extreme Netural Karta groups but an Orthodox element that claims a monopoly on religion. Prime Minister Ben Gurion and his party would like to blunt the power of religion in politics, but unfortunately political expediency has thrown the Orthodox element and Ben Gurion's Mapai party into the same government, so the monopoly of Orthodoxy grows stronger with each passing day.

The young Israeli is as disappointed with rigid, unchanging Orthodoxy as is the Liberal Jew in America. But his only alternative is indifference to religion. It cannot be charged that the Israeli is anti-religious. He studies the Bible throughout his grade school career. As an adult, too, he is thoroughly imbued with the ideals of the prophets. He has absorbed the teaching of Judaism and carries out its message in his every-day life. His faith and trust in God have enabled him to overcome a foe many times his number. If at present he ignores the Jewish religion and neglects the practices of Judaism it is because he has been driven from the faith of his fathers by those who erroneously imagine they are the protectors of the faith. Therefore Israel needs Liberal Judaism. It needs a liberalization of out-dated tenets and a revival of newer practices to replace older ones. Perhaps the Liberal Judaism he develops will only remotely resemble our American Liberal Judaism, but the Israeli will have to return to the fount of his inspiration, to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And his return to Judaism will be to an enlightened religion in the spirit of American Liberal Judaism if not entirely in its form. Artificial and temporary restrictions may retard the day of the return, but Israel needs a Liberal Judaism. And judging from past performances, when the Israeli needs something, he gets it. —Liberal Judaism.

SHERTOK WOULD SETTLE FOR 200 YEARS

The troubles of the statesman were touched on by columnist Leonard Lyons, reporting on a chat involving Moshe Sharret, Israel foreign minister. Ahe Feller, counsel to the United Nations, and Dr. Ralph Bunche, former UN mediator on Palestine. Sharret told Bunche of the origin of the Chanukah festival and compared the Macabees with the people of Israel today. Dr. Feller suggested that the foreign minister avoid pressing the-comparison too far, reminding Sharret that the Macabees lasted only 200 year. Sighed Sharret: "Two hundred years looks pretty good to me right now." —National Jewish Post.
