cooked and flavored in the approved Libyan and Algerian manner, and finally the wafer and sweetmeats of Iraq. It would seem we have much to learn when we are teaching.

It was resolved at the conference to ask the Government to cultivate some of the herbs and spices used by the newcomers, or to allow them to be imported duty-free, or else to give permission for the immigrants to bring them along. It was also decided to suggest that the Yemenites be supplied with flour to bake their own bread, and that the

Arnold Zweig — Behind The Iron Curtain

Arnold Zweig, the noted German Jewish writer, who went to Palestine after the Nazis came to power, appears to have settled down in the Soviet Zone of Germany, where he is president of the East German Academy of Arts. In that capacity he took a leading part in the "Peace Congress" in the Soviet sector of Berlin. Zweig, the author of "The Case of Sergeant Grisha," a best-seller written in 1927, first attracted attention by his "Sketches of the Klopfer Family," a book with a Jewish theme, which he wrote when quite young. At the age of 25, he wrote "Stories of Claudia," and most of his later books were devoted to Jewish and social questions and to pacifism. Zweig is out of favor with the British authorities. Like Dya Ehrenburg and other would-be delegates he was refused a visa to attend the Sheffield "Peace Congress." — London Jewish Chronicle

The Man Who Knew Our Debt to the Pharisees

The death of the Rev. Dr. Travels Hereford will be deeply mourned by Jewry, whose history and literature he interpreted with such fine devotion and scholarship. "What the world owes to the Pharisees," was the constant burden of his teaching, and in this sphere he did pioneer work in helping to remove some of the accumulated distortion and prejudice that surround this subject. The obstacles besetting him may be illustrated from the fact that among the definitions of "Pharisees" given by that standard work, "The Oxford English Dictionary," are "self-righteous person, formalist, hypocrite." Not only the Jewish people but all mankind should feel indebted to a scholar whose sole allegiance was to the sovereignty of truth. —Editorial comment in The London Jewish Chronicle has written a lengthy article in the London "Observer" in which he expresses the view that the Jewish race outside of Israel will disappear in one hundred years. Coming as it does from such a renowned authority, and from one who has always been well disposed towards the Jews, his pronouncement must be given the weightiest consideration by every Jew. Let us, therefore, quote fairly fully the salient passages from the "Observer" article:—

"It seems safe to prophesy that in a hundred years' time there will be no more Jews anywhere. There will be, with good fortune, the State of Israel, with its own distinctive but non-Jewish contribution to make; and there will be citizens of other countries with Jewish blood in their veins but without Jewish thoughts and feeling in their heads. One may regret the disappearance of a unique and valuable mentality, but one must feel an infinite relief that this long agony is over for the Jews, this long shame for the Gentiles."

He then goes on to stress the revolutionary changes that the traditional structure of Jewish life is undergoing and the growing divorce between the Jews of Israel and those of other lands. The only course open to the Jews of the world, in Mr. Toynbee's opinion, is to become Israelis or become fully assimilated members of the communities in which they find themselves.

But, while Mr. Toynbee regards our disappearance as inevitable, we, on the other hand, have expressed our faith in the future of the Jewish race outside of Israel, provided we can strengthen ourselves spiritually by drawing on our traditional heritage.

Mr. Toynbee's prophecies are omi-
