attitude towards the kaddish-sayers is a mixture of helpfulness and occasional disdain. They tend to suppress their superiority feelings, for services would be impossible without the numerical support of the kaddish-sayers.

WHO ARE THEY?

Who are the men who say Kaddish, and why do they come? It would be difficult to establish any common characteristics based on age, country of birth, religious training or belief. The men who recite the kaddish faithfully are of all ages, ranging from 13 to over 70. The older ones were born in Eastern Europe, but there are many native Americans.

Most are the sons of Orthodox parents, but there are some whose parents were not religious in any sense of the word. Likewise, the group is almost equally divided between those who had an intensive Jewish education (Yeshiva or Talmud Torah) and those with hardly any Jewish education. I was amazed at the number with just the bare rudiments of Jewish knowledge. Familiarity with Hebrew ranges over a wide spectrum, from those who can read it fluently and understand, to those who can read but not understand, to those who can read a little with difficulty, or not
