much, so in September we moved to London, invaded my parents' home and began to make preparations to leave the following August. Stanley took a temporary teaching job in Hackney and I at Rosh Pinah School in Edgeware, and for a year we saved every penny we could.

We searched around for the best way to travel. Cheap, but not too uncomfortable. The Jewish Agency offers reduced travel to intending temporary residents, which works out around $120 single London/Israel by boat or air. Flying was out of the question as we wanted to take our car with us, and by boat we found we could make our own arrangements almost as cheaply. We have chosen to go by the Epirotiki Line, which offers far better rates for the children and the car than the other lines. We have taken return tickets (we think of the return half as our safety belt) and the cost of a five-berth cabin with private toilet, plus transporting the car costs us $80 for the round trip from Venice and back.

In the end we sold our car — it was too big to run in Israel — and have bought a new Renault 4L which we will pick up in Paris on our way out. This works out much cheaper than buying one here — $350 as against $430 for a comparable size car here (tax-free of course). In Israel we won't have to pay purchase tax on the car, but if we stay there longer than a year, we will have to pay some import duty. We are not allowed to sell it there without paying the Israeli tax. The Jewish Agency has found us a flat at the old Anglo-Saxon Hostel in Jerusalem. We would have liked to be in the new one, which is supposed to be beautiful, but the flats in the old hostel are larger. The rent is £100 a month (about $12 a week). This includes linen and service, but we have to pay electricity separately.

We have had a lot of difficulty over the flat. We applied originally to the Jewish Agency in February. Since the maximum stay at the hostel is six months, we thought this was in ample time. We have only just had a letter offering us a flat and asking what arrangements they should make for us regarding travel. We've sent off our luggage to meet us at Venice. We inquired about various ways of sending it, and the cheapest we found was through the Anglo-Italian Shipping Agency, who pick it up at the house and deliver it to the ship. They take about 16 days and charge one shilling a kilo (2¼ lb.). British railways charge one shilling per lb., plus extra for collection and delivery. We packed out stuff in tea chests, which are cheaper to buy than trunks and hold more.

It is difficult to know what to take for a year, but we finally settled on all our clothes, a minimum of cutlery, some Melaware, tablecloths, towels and sheets, a pressure cooker, a tricycle and scooter.

In the car with us has to go the tent (we've bought a small second-hand frame tent), camp beds, lino, sleeping bags, butane cooker, utensils, typewriter, cine camera and projector, still camera and flash unit, table and stools and, if there's any room left, some clothes for the are "somewhere in Europe." Now we're all ready to leave, and are just keeping our fingers crossed that none of the children goes down with measles or mumps. We're looking forward to a really exciting year.
