

But criticisms in the House of Commons and particularly a powerful speech by Winston Churchill who, as Chaim Weizmann mentioned in his memoirs, had decided to end his estrangement with Zionism, provoked by the murder of Lord Moyne, made Bevin's position untenable.

Joseph Linton, a dedicated Jewish Agency official and a member of the Agency's delegation to the United Nations, had arrived in London with instructions from Israel's Foreign Minister, Moshe Sharett, to open a consulate-general and a diplomatic office. Premises were found in Manchester Square, where Sir Wyndham Deedes, one of the great British friends of Zionism, had established a Palestine House for his organization, a forerunner of the present Anglo-Israel Association. Mr. Linton, a dapper Londoner with a keen sense of the preposterous and an intimate knowledge of the personalities in the Labor movement, moved into Palestine House with a number of officials and awaited Mr. Bevin's recognition. When renewing his contacts with the Foreign Office and other Government departments, Mr. Linton amused the British officials by describing himself as a ghost, as he had not been recognized as an Israeli envoy.

This "ghost-like" existence continued for six months. But then Mr. Linton began to hear rumors that a decision had been taken by the British Government to recognize Israel. Churchill's intervention, supported by other Conservative leaders and pressure from circles within the Labor Party, had finally persuaded Mr. Bevin that he must change his policy.

On Friday, Jan. 28, 1949, Mr. Linton heard from "reliable sources"

Friday — there was no message from the Foreign Office. Before leaving, Mr. Linton suggested to his assistant, Dr. Eliezer

Yapou, and to other members of his staff, that they join him in the office next day — a Saturday — though, of course, it would be closed to the public.

One or two other members of the staff, curious to see what would happen, also turned up. Among them was Miss Doris May, Dr. Weizmann's former devoted secretary, a Catholic who served the Zionist cause with utter devotion. Miss May's task that day was to look after the telephone switchboard — a vital task.

Mr. Linton's colleagues were rather sceptical that there would be any move by the Foreign Office but he was confident. At 10 a.m. the phone rang. A Foreign Office official asked for Mr. Linton and inquired whether he could come to the Foreign Office by about 11 a.m. to see Mr. Bevin. This did not give Mr. Linton much

GREETINGS FOR THE SHAVUOTH FESTIVAL

The Jewish Festival of Shavuoth is a day of Thanksgiving. It is a time to give thanks for the joys of Spring and, more important, to celebrate the birthday of the Ten Commandments, to commemorate the event on Mount Sinai when the Israelites received those Divine teachings which freed them — and mankind — from moral anarchy.

The holiday serves to remind the world that only by practicing complete justice and integrity can mankind enjoy harmony, security and everlasting peace.

May we, on this occasion, extend warm greetings to the Jewish people everywhere and express the hope that they will mark this Festival with a full measure of joy and happiness.
